Description:

This paper outlines the experience through a classroom engagement with the first year Engineering Students. The method generated transcend the student's mind with the reflection of ethics and moral through practice and anecdote. The same is used to list of dos and do not's as a common conscience. The same exercise, when conducted on faculties gave a very different perspective and it seems that there is a blind spot which needs to be worked in. The paper develops a case study on local industry practice and worked to evolve a debate making reflections on ethics and moral. The same exercise, when posed to teacher's mass outside the University resulted in very fewer participation showing a general lack of interest and awareness. Total first year participated in the evolvement of ethics were 48 while faculty members were 86 while outside faculty members were nearly 48 again. As it is part of Graduate attribute 10, it is worth working in this direction from the first year.
